Man: Hello, can I help you?
Girl: Yes, please. I want to buy a new computer.
Man: Right! Are you looking for a touchscreen computer?
Girl: Oh, I think that's probably very expensive. I just want a laptop with a touchpad.
Man: Fine. And how much do you want to spend? This laptop is a bargain – just £550 – and it comes with a free printer.
Girl: Wow! That's good. But I've already got a printer at home. What about this laptop?
Man: This is our cheapest laptop. It's £350. It's a great computer and it's got a really good battery, but it's only got 4 GB of RAM.
Girl: Oh, well, I'm not sure. Maybe I'll think about it and come back tomorrow.
Man: OK then.

Man: I thought it was a touch screen so I tapped on it but nothing happened. So I used the mouse to choose 'Yes'. I did it again and again and nothing happened. Then I realised that I should choose 'Continue', not 'Yes'. Another silly mistake! So I clicked the correct button and the computer started working.

2

Woman: I saw a really nice computer in the electronics shop yesterday. When I wanted to move something on the screen, I didn't click on it or press a key on the keyboard. I just moved my finger on the screen just like on a mobile phone. It was so easy! Unfortunately, it was very expensive ...

Boy: So, the next thing was, the computer wanted information about me. I'm Michael, so I used the keyboard to enter that, and it took me to the next webpage. I was very happy! I usually make a lot of mistakes with the keys on the keyboard and the computer often doesn't like the answers – but this time it was all OK.

4

Woman: I entered the password but I didn't log in. A question popped up with two options: 'Yes' and 'No'. I didn't know which to choose so I tapped on the first but nothing happened. I did that again and again ... and then I realised that the correct answer was 'No'!
